What is the oscillation of doubt and why does it exist?

The oscillation of doubt is the rhythm of the mood that salesmen operate between: From a feeling of unwavering confidence to a feeling of utter fear and panic

This is the sad emotional existence of most salespeople

I
A

They live in a constant state of boom and bust, up and down

Why does this happen?

We can answer this question by looking to a principle in statistics called ‘regression to the mean’

A

If you flip this coin, you can expect 50/50 odds

Meaning it has a 50% chance of landing on heads or tails

- A coin has a 50/50 chance of landing on heads or tails.
- Most people expect the odds from a coin flip to be distributed evenly, for example heads / tails / heads / tails / heads / tails.
- This almost never happens as this is not how numbers and averages behave. Instead we see ‘clusters’ of outcome, such as heads / heads / heads / tails / heads / tails / tails / heads / tails / tails

- The same is true with sales calls. If you have a 33% conversion rate, you're going to win 1/3 of your calls and lose 2/3 of them, but it doesn't mean you're going to see that average with limited data.

- Most people expect a 33% conversion rate to look like this:

Won / Lost / Lost / Won / Lost / Lost / Won / Lost / Lost / Won

- But in reality, a 33% conversion rate is also just as likely to look like this...

Lost / Lost / Lost / Lost / Lost / Lost / Won / Won / Won

Lost / Lost / Lost / Lost / Lost / Lost / Won / Won / Won

Most salespeople don't have the emotional discipline or understanding of statistics to weather this 6 loss streak, and so they give up, get demotivated and slump further, or start changing their script or their whole business.

Sales slumps are inevitable, but the word ‘slump’ doesn’t have to be negative

The average will show itself with enough data and time, so the key to overcoming a slump is to just hang in there

Regression to the mean

The blue arrow is the mean and this represents the average. The black line is the trend and represents the oscillating nature of the numbers to achieve the mean.

Most salespeople are sucked into the strong emotional influence that the black line has, which is simply the oscillation around the average.

Regression to the mean

This is what we call ‘regression to the mean’.

At the end of the day, the only thing that matters is your average. Single days, weeks or even months do not define you, good or bad. Your average does, and we can only accurately depict this with lots of data and over a long enough period of time.

Regression to the mean

With sales calls, you will be up close and personal with regression to the mean, as you will have winning streaks of closed calls and losing streaks of calls that don't close.

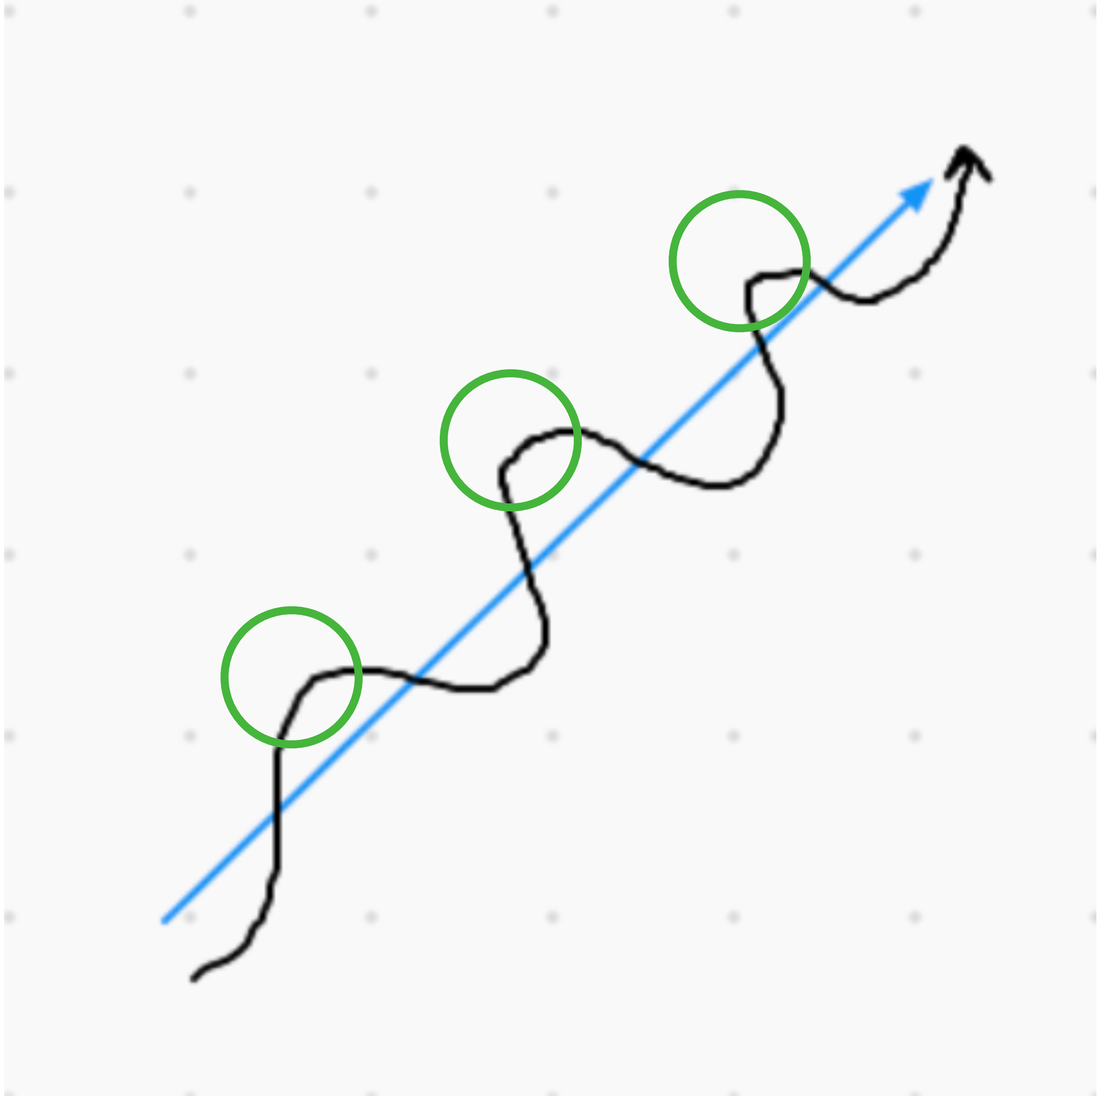

Your average 'conversion rate' is the sum of all the highs and the lows you've had across a long period of time (the blue line).

Slumps / ruts are inevitable and are required for the numbers to establish an average. Instead of seeing back to back ‘no’s’ as a bad thing, just see them as the trend, and know that if you hang in there and keep doing what you’re doing, the trend will oscillate back up.

Likewise, peaks are inevitable and will take you on a wild emotional ride of joy, optimism and confidence. They will eventually dip into troughs.

You must also practice not getting carried away by these, too. Emotional management is about staying steady and calm in the face of the good and bad.

The average never shows itself in small datasets, only in large datasets. Because of this, temporary winning or losing streaks are not representative of the average

30 Call Rule

With sales calls you cannot objectively judge your script, offer or guarantee (or business) until you have done at least 30 sales calls, using the exact same questions/pitch/process.

This is because it's entirely possible that your script and offer may result in a 33% conversion rate, but you can still get 20 back to back No's and then get 10 back to back Yes's.

This absolutely plagues the existence of most agency owners. They do 3-4 calls, get 3-4 no's in a row, then second guess their entire business, script and everything, when in reality 3-4 no's in a row means nothing at all!

IA

Don’t be fooled; I’ve had months where I’ve converted at 25% which is abysmal by my standards

But I am not defined by my highs (50%+ months) or my lows (25%- months), but the average between those two (30-40%)

But it doesn’t matter how well trained you are, or how kick-ass your script is. If you don’t control your state of mind, it will all be for nothing

Sales slumps are inevitable and are simply the regression to the mean average of your conversion rates over time

This is how numbers behave

You cannot afford to let this inevitable oscillation control your emotional state

The greatest weapon you can have in sales

True masters of sales understand statistics and how numbers behave and why slumps happen

More importantly, they don’t let the ‘trend’ of their efforts get to their head or demotivate them

A

If they enter a slump, they don’t let themselves get overrun with emotions of panic or fear. They remain unshakeable and pull through every time

Imagine if I gave up here...

Sales Armageddon: 3 reasons for the day of reckoning in sales

There are 3 things that cause ‘Sales Armageddon’

These things wreak havoc on the lives of salespeople, and just by knowing they exist you can avoid running into them

“All I want to know in life is where I’m going to die so I never go there”

- Charlie Munger

Improving your conversion rate is more about not doing the wrong things than doing the right things!

No point having a cracking script if you’re making 1 of these 3 mistakes...

What are these 3 things that result in extinction for salespeople?

Cause #1 - Limited Quantity

Cause #1 - Limited Quantity

- Limited quantity means you are not doing enough calls to warrant you getting any results. Since averages present themselves over large datasets, it's impossible to get out of a rut if you don't continue and do more calls. You can get 10 back to back no's, and this will even happen to the best salespeople in the agency space. Just keep going. It took me about 60 calls to land my first client (w/out script).

- Understand: your only objective should be doing 30 calls and you must NOT make any adjustments or iterations to your script, pitch, offer, guarantee or business until you have done 30 full calls. Most agency owners do 4 calls, get 4 no's and then go back to the drawing board in an emotional fit of panic.

- This is the biggest cause of extinction among salespeople. They simply don't try, or don't try for a long enough period of time. If you haven't done 30 calls with your new script yet, then your only focus should be doing 30 calls.

Cause #2 - Faulty Preconceived Beliefs

Cause #2 - Faulty Preconceived Beliefs

- A faulty preconceived belief is a belief that is not an accurate representation of reality, that you take into the call. These beliefs are self fulfilling, meaning if you believe something is true, you will indirectly or directly make it come true, because of the positive feedback relationship between belief and behaviour.

- Here's an example: you do 4 sales calls with your new script, and all 4 calls end in a no because 'they'd rather do it in house'. You then begin to believe that all the businesses in your niche want to take their marketing in house, and then your actions and behaviour on the call skew the call towards this 'do it yourself' route as that's what you fundamentally believe the prospect wants. Before you know it everyone you speak to is saying 'I'd rather do it in house'.

- Similarly, if you believe that your prospect has no money pre-call or during the call, you'll skew the call towards that. A personal recent example for me was doing 5-6 calls in the agency space, to find that most people wanted 'done for you'. I began to believe this, and before I knew it EVERYONE wanted done for you! It wasn't until I caught this faulty belief and corrected my behaviour that this was fixed.

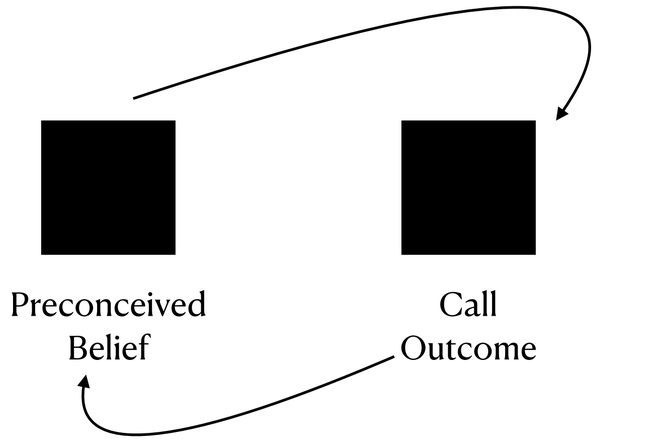

Faulty Preconceived Beliefs are extremely dangerous and if you form them early on, they will plague all your calls

Simply put: if you believe it, it’ll come true

This happens due to feedback loops

You believe the call will end in a no for a specific reason and therefore bias the call to go in that direction

Call ends in a no, confirming your belief and strengthening it

Cause #2 - Faulty Preconceived Beliefs

- When conducting calls you must keep your emotions in check and avoid getting emotional about the outcome of the call. Your agency will not grow if you form beliefs and predictions about your niche, script or business based on a select few prospects saying no. You can't accurately judge anything until you've done at least 30 calls.

- Remember, you can have a ton of back to back no's (e.g. 8), but this won't really mean anything. The only thing that means anything is the average and the average won't show itself in a small dataset. Do not let your negative emotions manifest into shitty beliefs that aren't an accurate depiction of reality, only for them to spiral out of control and ruin your agency.

- The best thing you can do is stick to the 30 call rule and never waver in your process, despite any uncertainty or emotion. Any judgements or beliefs formed before 30 calls will be inaccurate and will create never ending self fulfilling prophecies.

- A belief has 'efficacy' when it it grounded in data.

Cause #3 - No Tracking & No Evolution

Cause #3 - No Tracking & No Evolution

- No tracking & no evolution means you are not consistently recording your calls or taking notes on what's working and what isn't. This means you can't evolve your script as you do not have any reliable feedback that is an accurate representation of the truth. You must record your calls and use the script modification feedback sheet we provided in earlier training videos to know what the hell is actually going on!

- If you are tracking but not using this data to iterate your script and therefore evolve it, then you will also fail.

- Most people fail because they don't improve. They stagnate and plateaux. They sit at fixed conversion rate for the rest of their days and can't break out of it. The only way to break free is to track everything and actually listen to the feedback so you can make adjustments that are rooted in the truth.

Solution for The Oscillation of Doubt & Sales Armageddon

Let’s wrap this up and tie it all together

How do we overcome The Oscillation of Doubt and how do we avoid going extinct from one of the 3 causes of Sales Armageddon?

Solving The Oscillation of Doubt & Avoiding Extinction

1. Awareness: You must be aware of The Oscillation of Doubt and you must be aware of why it occurs. The core founding principle tom this is regression to the mean and we now know that averages don't show themselves in small datasets, hence why we experience winning and losing streaks.

2. Quantity: You do not know if you are right or wrong about anything to do with your script, business, niche, offer, guarantee of anything related to your sales process until you have done at least 30 sales calls. Quantity will also pull you out of a rut and the only way to lose is to give up.

3. Efficacy: You must only make decisions and form beliefs when you have conducted at least 30 calls, listened back to them and taken accurate notes on each one. Never take any judgements or beliefs seriously until you've conducted at least 30 calls.

4. Evolution: You must record all of your calls, listen to feedback, then make iterations and improvements to your script to keep pace so you can evolve. If you stay where you are, you will get left behind.

Practical tips for emotional management

Now you should understand the core principles to The Oscillation of Doubt & Sales Armageddon

Let’s explore some practical tips you can implement in your day-to-day life to keep your emotions in check and manage your mind

Practical Tips for Emotional Management: Part 1

- Diet: Stop eating crappy food. Stay away from processed foods and sugary / fatty foods. I always find that when I eat lots of sugar, my emotions go haywire and I'm always most turbulent the day after I've eaten sugar. My best weeks in sales come when I've cleansed myself of sugary snacks or processed foods for at least 72 hours.

- Sleep: Take your sleep seriously. Go to bed and wake up at the same time, every damn damn. Aim for 8 hours a night and guarantee yourself 7. Sleep is our brains primary fuel for impulse resistance and emotional management. Don't believe me? Try going a night without sleep then conducting 4-5 sales calls that end in a no and see what happens.

- Meditation: Meditate every day for 20 minutes without fail. Sit down in a quiet room and shut your eyes. Focus on where you feel your breath most prominent and hold your focus there. When your attention / thoughts wander from this pinpoint, notice the pull and bring it back. This way, when you're working and notice an emotion, you'll bring yourself back to reality.

- Noting: Note your emotions in the sales tracker after every call while they're still 'hot'. Just noting them will weaken them.

Practical Tips for Emotional Management: Part 2

- Volume: Build systems that book lots of calls. That way, if you go on a losing streak you know you have the quantity to regress back to your average and get out of the slump.

- The Fat Lady Principle: Never, ever, ever, ever celebrate a sale until the payment is processed. I cannot tell you how much havoc 'pre-emptive celebration' has wreaked on me. If someone says they are going to go ahead, do not believe them until you have their card details processed and the money in your stripe account. People lie, payments don't. "It's not over til' the fat lady sings means you shouldn't presume the outcome of an event that is still in progress".

- Long term averages: Don't pay any attention to your conversion rate unless it's at a monthly level and is supported by significant volume (30 calls minimum). Don't get emotional that you've had a down week or a down day.

- Manage the ups: Don't allow yourself to get too elated on a winning streak. You want to feel positive emotions to fuel the fire and you want to keep the momentum going, but if you don't keep this in check, the negative emotions you experience in a slump will be just as strong and harder to overcome.
